Stacy Middlemiss is deeply grateful to have been born and raised on the ancestral and unceded territory of the Coast Salish people. It is an immense privilege to raise a family in the very community where my husband and I spent our formative years.

Stacy's dedication to the City of Duncan's well-being and growth remains steadfast. With a background as a registered psychiatric nurse, Stacy brings a unique perspective to her roles as both an elected official and nurse. She has spent much of her life tirelessly advocating for those who feel unheard and/or unseen. Her work exemplifies a deep-seated passion for social justice, standing resolutely for her convictions. Stacy firmly believes that meaningful change begins with dialogue, and she approaches even the most challenging conversations with courage and compassion.

Now embarking on her second term of service for the City of Duncan, Stacy remains grateful for the opportunity to represent her constituents. Collaborating with the Mayor and Council, she eagerly anticipates engaging with the community, amplifying their voices, and championing the changes they seek. Stacy's commitment to fostering a more inclusive and prosperous Cowichan Valley remains unwavering as she continues to work for the betterment of all who call this region home.
